It's almost impossible to be immune to the excitement of another Christmas approaching the calendar. Admiration and excitement like those kids don't have to be limited to a quick peek every morning, though. Advent calendars make ceremonies anticipating the big day, and for more than a century, they have added drama and perhaps some surprises to the weeks before Christmas [source: Holidays.net]. There is some disagreement about how the Advent practice may have begun, but there is no doubt that it can be very pleasant to add functional decorations to the festivities that act as a calendar counting down the days to Christmas. Although traditional Advent calendars officially start the countdown on the fourth Sunday before Christmas and often have simple markers moved from one day to the next, many newer calendars start the festivities on December 1, and often combine containers for holding sweets and other treats. The first step in creating an Advent calendar is to determine the scope of the project. From simple grids of 25 boxes, to elaborately decorated schemes, such as those that use Christmas trees painted with hooks or tabs to store treats and images, you can let your budget and creative interests guide you. For a quick and easy approach, you can even have your children create an annual Advent calendar from construction paper and place hook-and-loop dots on photos to add each of the 24 days before Christmas. However you plan to proceed, you will need some common elements: Backing Design -- Although you can only record construction paper to the refrigerator, if you want an Advent calendar that will withstand some wear and tear, you should give it solid support. Some popular options are: framed canvases, cardboard, cork boards, tin cake sheets, light plywood, and quilted fabrics. Create Grid -- To mark individual days through Christmas, create daily placeholders in the background. If young children are involved, using a grid, such as a standard calendar, may be the most practical setting, but other creative approaches also work. From drawing Santa's face and placing a grid on his beard, to incorporating the days into the sled scene with every number peeking out of Santa's bag, almost anything will be done as long as it's easy to determine how the system works. Create Bookmarks -- Now that you have a foundation and a plan, you need markers for the countdown You can create simple markers by suspending small objects, such as cardboard snowmen, from the length of the tape. Every day, place the snowman in a different position on the grid. You can hold it in place with hook-and-loop points, or place a small envelope on each day that marks the snowman fits in. If you want to add some excitement and real drama, add treats, like cakes or sweets, to the envelope. As each day passes, your child receives a treat, and the marker takes the place of the treat in the envelope. There are several other methods you can use here as well. You can place photos or other interesting flat objects for each day behind doors made of craft paper. When the door opened, they expressed surprise. You can also fill in envelopes with instructions that reveal the location of cheap gifts. The options are quite open, and with the wide availability of scrapbooking and stamping products, you can find almost any motif you have in mind. There is one thing you should think about before starting your project. Using the Advent calendar can grow into a family tradition and you may become much more important than you planned, so wake up from the rough ingredients to withstand years of Christmas fun. It depends how creative you want to get, but for starters, collect useful materials such as cardboard boxes, wooden spare strips, used paper and pieces of fabric - this is a great way to reduce waste by cycling and repurposing. And do not forget important things like pens, paints (acrylic is all-round good), plus glue and adhesive tape. Your DIY advent calendar can look as good as a store-bought one, in fact, it will have a special meaning because it is handmade. Find out how to create an advent calendar with these easy ideas using items from Home. 1. Homemade advent calendar with a thoughtful touchWe love this thoughtful adult advent calendar idea from craft blogger Jayanthi at Maiden Aunt. All you need is a cork board, a few pins, a mini mini and paper and pens. Write a list of 25 things that will make you smile every day in December on a separate piece of paper and put in each envelope - this is a wonderful countdown to Christmas Day. Jayanthi Ezekiel you can also follow the same idea here but put them in a box instead of hanging or pecking onto a board, or pop them into a large jar. This content is imported from Pinterest. Print your favorite or most valuable photos (try Bonusprint, Snapfish, or Photobox for online services) in retro Polaroid-style format. The photos you choose can be themed or part of the event, but as long as everything means something to you it's the most important thing. Once printed, rotate each photo on the back and number each, then pin it to cardboard or thick paper (aim for A2 or A1 size). As you submit photos every day you will end up with a beautiful photo collage capturing special memories, perfect for this year. This content is imported from Pinterest. Wake up to the excitement with an advent calendar of red and white paper bags filled with treats. Accessories with ribbons and mini decorations. And Duchars 4. Wood advent calendarOne of the simplest, but most effective wooden advent calendars I've ever seen is a series of wooden slats that are cut into different sizes and repaired together to create a Christmas tree shape, says DIY expert Jo Behari.You can use an old palette or apple crate to make your own. Cut the ends at an angle so that they have a nice slope to the shape of the tree: you can use mitre blocks or just make pencil marks to cut together using a square. Screw them together on the back using flat brackets, or fix them to long wooden strips. When you have the shape of your tree, hammer in small nails to hang the treats of your arrival. The star at the top will add a Touch of Christmas. SE7ENTYN9NE.COM 'If this sounds a little difficult, a very simple wooden advent calendar will be an MDF strip painted in Christmas colors,' points out Jo. 'You can even add your surname to it and then hang 24 (or 25 if you count Christmas Day) wooden pegs on it. Each year you can customize your treats either by hanging them directly or in small packages attached to pegs.'5. Part buy, part make The Works If you don't have a spare wooden box lying around the house, you can buy, for example, a wooden advent box, and decorate it yourself with découpage paper or acrylic paint. The Works sells a wooden house advent calendar for £20, while Baker Ross sells one for £16.95. This 25 drawer cabinet from The Works (£15) is a great alternative, and you can also buy a similar version on Amazon.6. DIY cardboard tube advent calendarAll you need to do is save 12 cardboard cardboard tubes roll out the kitchen and use leftover wrapping paper, plus some numbered stickers. Keep things very simple and hassle-free by using wooden pegs, which you can paint with festive colors, to hang envelopes or small bags (such as burlap bags) containing small gifts. String with jute twine. ega/Getty Figure 8. Advent calendar Christmas sackWe love this idea. Just use your old gift sack from last year, or you can buy a new Christmas sack, and fill it with a small pillow box (buy from Amazon) that you can number for every day in December through Christmas Day. Fill the pillow box with whatever you like, whether it's chocolate, trinkets, tree decorations or mini bottles of alcohol. This content is imported from Pinterest.
